

CITING EVIDENCE

Title: "The Titanic, the Wireless Operator's Story"

Genre: Interview (Article)

Author: Harold Bride

"We've struck an iceberg," the captain said. "You had better send out a call for help."

At first none of us was that worried. In fact we joked about it.

The captain told us we had been struck in the middle of the ship. The crew had spotted the iceberg, but thought it was further away than it actually was. When the hit came, it seemed like only a slight bump, so we didn't think there could be that much damage.

Q: How did the crew first react to the news that their ship had hit an iceberg?

CITING EVIDENCE

Title: "Seven Brothers a Family Affair in Saratoga Springs"

Genre: News article

Author: Doug Fox

Seven Brothers has been creating a bit of a buzz since it opened about a month ago. With an original restaurant in Laie, Hawaii, and food trucks operating in Arizona and Utah, we went into our weekend visit prepared for an island, beach vibe — which, let's face it, is definitely a dreary inversion mood buster around these parts in January. We were not disappointed. The decor inside Seven Brothers included a half-dozen prominently situated surf boards, colorful beach/ocean photography and a couple big screens that were actually televising a surfing competition while we were there.

Q: Where did the restaurant Seven Brothers start?

CITING EVIDENCE

Title: "How to Plan a Last-Minute Trip to the 2018 Winter Olympics"

Genre: News Article

Author: Ann Babe

Depending on your sporting interests, the prices vary widely, with qualifier rounds costing much less than medal events. For women's ice hockey, for example, the preliminaries are as little as $23.44 a ticket, while the gold medal game is $295.03 and up. Some sports, like bobsleigh, skeleton and luge, have completely sold out already. Others, like figure skating, are available on an event-by-event basis, with the most high-profile ones snatched up long ago. Sixty percent of tickets have been sold, according to Ms. Park's estimates, so while plenty remain, it's best to order as soon as you can.

Q: What percentage of event tickets are already sold?

CITING EVIDENCE

Title: A Spy in the House

Genre: Novel

Author: Y. S. Lee

"Th-thank you." She dropped into the nearest seat, a slippery horsehair chair that immediately attempted to deposit her onto the floor. She didn't normally stammer. Never Had. This was a devil of a time to begin.

Anne poured a third cup of tea and handed it to her. It was a very warm day, especially up in the attic. As a curl of steam reached her nostrils, Mary blinked, her nervousness doubling. She was holding a cup of Lapsang souchony, a tea the ladies generally reserved for special occasions.

Q: How is Mary feeling? What about her actions lets you know?